Congressman paign speeches this fall when he comes elected secretary. back to Nebraska and tries to explain just where the benefits come to the farmer from the new democratic tariff bill

Extract From Speech.

Maguire closes his speech by saying The food supply of our farms becomes our greatest asset not alone in times of peace, but is more powerful than armies and navies in times of war. Stop the plow and the millions in American homes would soon clamor for the bread line. would soon clamor for the bread line.

Let a general drougth come, and not alone the food supply would disappear, but the anvil would cease to ring and the wheels of industry would become silent. Let a famine or a plague strike at the herds and flocks on the farms and the meat supply would soon minimize the capacity and power of every wage carnet and every citizen. Stop any industry and of course, the effect would be felt; but of course, the effect would be felt; but strike at the productive power and stop the production on the American farm, and you have not alone paralyzed every other industry and occupation, but you have struck at the vitality, the power, the happiness of every citizen and every home. Agriculture holds a fundamental and unique place in our social, industrial and economic welfare because it supplies the food for the world.

When one takes into consideration the fact that already Argentina has finished its harvest and is preparing to ship to York and other eastern markets 250,000,000 bushels of corn aver and above what that country needs for its own use. and that as soon as it arrives in the United States it will take the place of 250,000,000 bushels of Nebraska, Iowa, Illineis, Kansas and other corn and cut the market just as much, the wisdom of th speech can be seen, although not from the same point that the silent statesman intended it to cover.

The Market Hit.

It makes little difference whether the market is deprived of Nebraska-Iowa-Kanses corn by drouth, a famine or a plague, as the slient statesman puts it, or whether the market is hit by an importation of foreign corn from Argentina. made possible by a democratic tariff bill, the effect on the "anvil and the wheels would be the same and the farmers of the country are aware of that fact without reading the "leave to print" speech of the silent congressman from the First Nebraska district. As far as the effect on the agricultural industry of the country is concerned, there is little difference between a drouth, famine, plague or a democratic tariff bill.

SOME PAWNEE DEMOS BALK AT ENDORSING MOREHEAD

PAWNEE CITY, July 26 .- (Special.)in the democratic county convention held here day before yesterday when a number of leading democrata objected to a resolution read before the gathering endorsing Governor Morehead. The opposition arose over the misunderstanding that it was an endorsement of the governor for re-nomination. One of the reasons for this adverse feeling is probably the increase in taxes under the present administration which, in Pawnee county, amounted to over 21/2 mills.

The delegation to the state convention at Columbus will be composed of George A. Cotton, jr.; George F. Cotton of Table Bock; F. A. Kehmeler, Charles Schroff, jr., Steinauer: William Stephenson, H. S. Farwell, DuBois; J. K. Henninger, H. C. Van Horne, Hugh Macleod and A. E. Ovenden, Rawnee City.
